Interdisciplinary Arts (IA) is a new degree option in IAS. It draws together diverse media and art forms—including performance, written, and visual arts. The option gives students opportunities to study art and to develop their own art practices. As a new field within IAS, IA responds to several impetuses:

- changing technologies introduce new possibilities for art-making, including new forms of multi-media art
- individuals’ relationships to diverse communities find creative formations through the arts
- the arts initiate creative solutions in multiple fields of endeavor and are instructive for creativity itself
- artists collaborate across and through multiple art forms.

In order to launch this new area, IAS has made two recent hires. Professor Joe Milutis (Ph.D, University of Wisconsin, Milwaukee) joined the UW Bothell faculty in fall 2008, and Professor Ted Hiebert (Ph.D., Concordia University) will arrive in fall 2009. Professor Milutis brings important media dimensions to the IA area, teaching courses on everyday life, radio and sound art, and creative non-fiction. Milutis stresses the importance of being creative with media: “The experimental media world is one in which there are people who are interested in collaborating and working in ways that are not about slavishly following Hollywood formulas, but coming up with their own vision.” Most important to that vision is “finding other people who are excited about it.”

Professor Ted Hiebert also brings a media orientation to IA, with photography and digital arts as his primary fields of endeavor. He describes himself as focused on “the relationship between the imagination and questions of cultural meaning,” as these relationships encounter “emergent technologies” and “uncertainty” in contemporary life. He examines the overlap among photographic practice, digital technology, consciousness research, and neuropsychology.

These new faculty members join IAS Professors JoLynn Edwards, Kanta Kochhar-Lindgren, and Jeanne Heuving, who worked for several years to bring their diverse visions of the arts into the new IAS option.

Associate Professor Kochhar-Lindgren, who started in IAS in 2002, has major commitments to the areas of dance, movement, and performance: “All of my courses are hybrid and incorporate an interactive arts-based component as part of a commitment to diverse learning styles and to visual, spatial, and kinesthetic literacies. From the Desk of the Director

Dear Alumni and Friends of IAS,

We have just concluded the 2008-09 academic year, with nearly 223 students set to graduate from our undergraduate programs in IAS and another 15 from our graduate programs. We are already looking forward to the 20th anniversary of IAS and the UW Bothell campus in 2009-10. As we pause to catch our breath, let me update you on a few highlights of the past year, and solicit your continuing support for our collective work.

In the past few newsletters, I have used this space to talk about the expansion of our undergraduate and graduate curriculum. I can do that again. We succeeded in 2008-09 in gaining approval for a new undergraduate option in Media and Communication Studies and are nearing approval to transition all of our options in Interdisciplinary Studies to independent majors. In the near future, our goal is to house 10-12 undergraduate majors and 2-4 graduate programs. We have taken these steps while maintaining IAS’s long-term commitment to interdisciplinary teaching and integrative learning.

I also want to draw your attention to a few of the many research, teaching, and career accomplishments of IAS faculty members during 2008-09. Professor Bill Seaburg’s Pitch Woman and Other Stories was named an Outstanding Academic Book by the American Library Association; Associate Professor Dave Stokes conducted grant-funded research with the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service to develop restoration and conservation plans for imperiled species of the South Puget Sound Prairie; Assistant Professor Keith Nitta published The Politics of Structural Education Reform with Routledge Press; and Professor Jeanne Heuving published a new collection of poetry, Transducer, with Chax Press.

In terms of teaching, I am very pleased to report that IAS has swept the UW Bothell teaching awards this year: Assistant Professor Peter Littig won the UW Bothell Distinguished Teaching Award and IAS lecturer Julie Shayne garnered the ASUWB Faculty Award. Congratulations also to Assistant Professor Ron Krabill on his tenure and promotion to the rank of Associate Professor, and to Associate Professors Colin Danby and Martha Groom on their promotions to the rank of Professor.

A complete list of IAS accomplishments could fill this newsletter. I sample from that list because I want to stress the breadth of the IAS faculty’s commitment to research and teaching is at the core of the university, even as the accomplishments of individual faculty members can get lost in the hubbub of program and campus development. These individual forms of research and teaching excellence are what allow IAS to succeed and its students to thrive.

Finally, I want to encourage you to play an active role in the future growth of IAS. If you would like to receive information about IAS events or become more involved in IAS as an alumnus, please contact either me (burgett@uw.edu) or Lindsey McCarthy (LMccarthy@uw.edu). If you are able to support IAS with a charitable contribution, please consider the Liberal Studies Excellence Fund or the IAS Graduate Excellence Fund. Information about these funds and the activities they support is available at http://www.uwg.edu/chancellor/development/.

3rd ANNUAL:
NORTHWEST ECO/COMMUNITY PSYCHOLOGY CONFERENCE

On October 17, 2008, Portland Community College hosted the 3rd Northwest ECO/Community Psychology Conference featuring, “Theory into Practice: The Necessary Cycle of Theory, Research and Application.” IAS students Hannah Cook, Sigrid Crompe, April Lee, Shelley Heathman, and Ann Patton, along with IAS Professor Diane Gillespie, led an interactive workshop using Augusto Boal’s Image Theatre. Drawing from their IAS experiences, these student presenters worked collaboratively with faculty and students from other colleges in the Northwest to create complex images around shared internalized oppressions.

In debriefing the images, participants explored how they might use these

Professor Kanta Kochhar-Lindgren

Professor Gray Kochhar-Lindgren
CUSB Program Director and IAS Professor Gray Kochhar-Lindgren’s essay, “A Passion for Waiting: Walter Benjamin in the Cafés,” has been nominated for inclusion in Best Creative Non-Fiction and for a Pushcart Prize. It can be found online at The Café Irrea.

Professor Keith Nitta
A new Assistant Professor in IAS and MAPS, Professor Nitta recently published The Politics of Structural Education Reform with Routledge Press.

Professor Robin Oppenheimer
Lecturer Robin Oppenheimer presented her research “Maximal Art: The Origins and Aesthetics of West Coast Light Shows” at the College Art Association conference in Los Angeles in February 2009 and at the Media Archeology Festival in Houston in April 2009. Robin recently passed her Ph.D. qualifying exams at the School of Interactive Arts and Technology at Simon Fraser University in Vancouver, BC. strategies in their own work and classroom settings. Image theater challenges participants’ intrinsic worldviews by revealing the cumulative pain, guilt, and strength that each of us experience from daily contact with power structures. Attending this community psychology conference allowed students and faculty to observe how others are mobilizing their communities.

IAS Alumni: Graduate School Calling...

Master of Arts in Cultural Studies (MACS)

UW Bothell’s first Master of Arts in Cultural Studies cohort is wrapping up year one!

The 2008 Master in Cultural Studies cohort are on the cusp of completing their first year of this two-year graduate program. Throughout the program, students develop the Cultural Studies portfolio, a collection of student work and related reflective material that displays key learning and charts student development over time. The portfolio includes a capstone research project. Winter quarter generated an array of interesting proposals – some of which may become students’ capstone projects. Examples of potential capstones include: digital story telling by residents of transient communities; using performance arts to explore intimate relationships among individuals with mental disabilities; collaborative fiction writing with teen girls; building bridges between high school gay-straight alliances; and an ethnographic exploration of indigenous land rights activism. Learn more about these inventive and wide-ranging projects in coming months by visiting the Cultural Studies website at http://www.uwb.edu/IAS/mac/research/.

Master of Arts in Policy Studies (MAPS)

Solid Ground

Policy Studies graduate students often intern within local organizations, contributing to policy-related initiatives that impact our communities. Graduate student Jessica Bonney interned with Solid Ground, an organization dedicated to achieving a just and caring community, free from poverty, prejudice and neglect. Serving within Solid Grounds’ Housing Counseling program, Jessica utilized her research and analysis skills for a housing advocacy taskforce that drafted a bill to remove barriers to accessing housing and the legal system. As it stands, people facing eviction often waive their right to a hearing because just the mere filing of a lawsuit will permanently damage their public record. Even in cases where the tenant wins in court the record of the eviction will cause them to be denied housing. While a large portion of filed evictions result in a settlement, the tenant is still marked with a negative record that impedes their ability to seek future housing. Jessica’s role involved collecting and analyzing eviction and sheriff’s office data from each county in Washington state, attending several coalition and advocacy group meetings, and training non-profit groups about the impact of the eviction process on the homeless and low-income tenants in Washington state.

“This experience has brought the policy process to life for me and I have been able to utilize skills learned in each of my classes to achieve social awareness and change in my community.”

-Jessica Bonney, MAPS Student

As IAS Graduate Programs External Relations Coordinator, Lisa Olason advises Cultural Studies and Policy Studies graduate students on internships and career development and builds campus-community partnerships. Before joining UW Bothell in 2008, Lisa spent 15 years working in the Seattle-area nonprofit sector - eight of those in the field of international relief and development. Lisa enjoys exposing students to opportunities in the local and global community, and she invites organizations to contact her about collaborating with IAS graduate students. Lisa may be reached at (425) 325-3136 or lolason@uwb.edu.
Professors Edwards and Heuving, both founding faculty members of UW Bothell, have worked to keep artistic endeavor a central mission of the IAS program. Professor Edwards, a former professional ballet dancer, taught the first Interdisciplinary Arts core this winter. This course enabled Edwards to explore her life-long commitment to understanding interrelationships among diverse arts forms. She was particularly pleased that the course enabled students to engage “their learning, creativity, and intellectual strengths in alternating rhythms.”

Professor Heuving is committed to drawing together critical and creative approaches to the arts and to helping students discover creative relationships to language. She teaches courses in poetry, autobiography, and cross genre writing and is looking forward to engaging new media explorations in the near future.

In addition to its five core faculty members, the IA option derives considerable richness from practicing artists who teach within the program as well as other IAS faculty members who orient their courses around the arts.

What do Interdisciplinary Arts students do?

The Interdisciplinary Arts option prepares students for the following futures:

1) artistic endeavors in diverse settings such as schools, disability programs, nursing homes, and environmental organizations;

2) work in interdisciplinary teams for innovation in business, computing, and education;

3) careers in the arts and culture industries, such as in museums and art centers;

4) careers as independent artists;

5) graduate study in arts- and culture-based and cultural MA, MFA, and Ph.D. degree programs.
