“Bothell students are a cut above the rest. Our diverse student body brings a myriad of life experiences into the classroom that allows us to have honest dialogue and learn to work through difficult conversations as we work toward building a more inclusive campus community. Our smaller class sizes means that I truly get to know my students - their families, histories, and passions - that helps me teach in a more meaningful way. It’s not just students learning from faculty but it is faculty learning from students.”

DR. JANELLE SILVA, Assistant Professor of Community Psychology, School of Interdisciplinary Arts & Sciences

“Opportunities. This is what I like most about UW Bothell. Every university claims that there are abundant ways to get involved on campus, but between the on-campus jobs, student leadership positions and undergraduate research here, you’re sure to find an activity that fits you. By coming to UW Bothell, you gain access to all of these resources right away. Personally, by getting involved, I gained a new understanding of others’ points of view through networking and getting to know other students and faculty.”
